

Subscribe to Express-News : Find&Save : Classifieds : Obituaries : Celebrations : Place a Classified

Like Register : Sign In

July 8, 2014

87° F Partly Cloudy

Search bar with 'mySA.com' and 'Local Directory' links

San Antonio's Home Page

Home Local US & World Business Sports Food Entertainment Lifestyle Opinion Cars Jobs Homes FIND&SAVE

ARTS & CULTURE > ENTERTAINMENT > VISUAL ARTS

Not-so-basic drawings about moving the line

BY STEVE BENNETT : MARCH 15, 2012 : Updated: March 18, 2012 5:45pm

E-mail Print Recommend Tweet +1

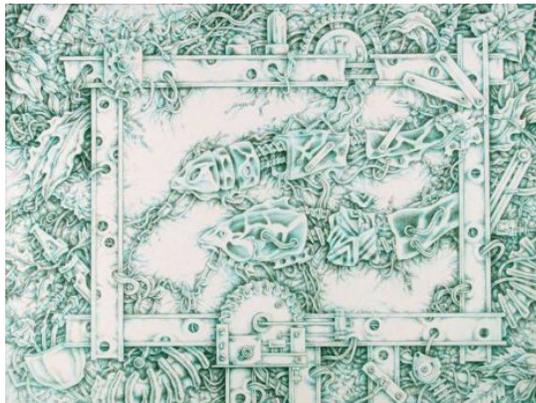

Photo By Courtesy of the artist

2 of 3

Lubbock artist Terry Morrow has four meticulous drawings in "Texas Draws II" at the Southwest School of Art, including "Professor Lockheed's Aquarium #1."

For "Texas Draws II," curator Kathy Armstrong says she wanted to try some things that were "a little bit more experimental in the movement of a line."

MORE INFORMATION

Things To Do

Renew Marketplace
SUNDAY, SEP 14, 10:00 AM
San Antonio Shrine Auditorium, San Antonio

Todrick Hall & KLiK...
THURSDAY, JUL 10, 7:30 PM
The Playhouse San Antonio, San Antonio

The Butler Enterprises...
TUESDAY, JUL 22, 8:00 PM
AT&T Center, San Antonio

CHOOSE DATE

8 TUE 9 WED 10 THU 11 FRI 12 SAT 13 SUN 14 MON ALL EVENTS

SEARCH KEYWORDS

Search input field

Submit an Event More Things To Do

Latest Entertainment Videos

Which is a wonderful definition for one of our most fundamental skills, often lost in an art world that seems overly enamored with concept and installation and technology. Drawing, as any kindergartner can tell you, involves moving a line.

www.swschool.org

Continuing through April 29 at the Southwest School of Art, where Armstrong is the director of exhibitions, this second biennial survey of the art of drawing across the state — the school's contribution to Contemporary Art Month — is both challenging and comforting.

Few will forget Daniel Adame's "performance drawing" at the exhibition's March 1 opening reception, when the Houston artist and dancer donned a sort of "chalk helmet" and drew on a blackboard.

Visitors could, and still can, contribute to the "collaborative drawing" in the hallway of the Russell Hill Rogers Gallery, a project inspired by the surrealists' "exquisite corpse" projects in which words and/or images were collectively assembled. Armstrong invites anyone, artist or not, to stop by and make a contribution to what will become a 5-foot by 33-foot community work.

Chinese artist Beili Liu, who lives in Austin, has formed a beautifully tangled 6-foot mass of dark, thin reeds into a "three-dimensional drawing" suspended from the ceiling against a white background. It is a subtle and stunning work that seems to communicate directly with Liu's nearby "Wind Drawing," a large-scale work of ink on panel that apparently depended on various gusts and breezes to form its rivulets and swirls. It resembles a satellite shot of a complex water system.

"My work depends on genuine connection with the material," says the artist, born in Jilin, China, in 1974. "I watch for the moment of surprise, when the material responds to one or a series of actions and leads to an exciting physical or conceptual outcome."

Dallas artist Rosemary Meza Des Plas plucks her own hair out of her head and sews with it on canvas to create works about women and violence. Her "La Gancha" women, packing pistols, are juxtaposed with "media-manipulated" images of violence such as the girls from "Charlie's Angels." Meza Des Plas' use of such a fundamental material (hair) in what is considered a woman's craft (sewing) gives her work a strong primal power.

Anne Allen, who's from Fort Worth, has contributed several "Bloody Scratch Drawings," red watercolor drawings on paper based on injuries sustained during the treasure-hunting game known as geocaching, in which players try to locate hidden containers, called geocaches, using GPS-enabled devices and then share their experiences online. (See www.geocaching.com/) These small, exquisite "networks of scratches" reflect the scrapes and bruises incurred on hikes in rugged terrain. Like a scab you can't stop picking, they draw you in with their invocations of pain.

Three San Antonio artists are including in "Texas Draws II."

Judith Cottrell, whose "drawbot" automatic drawing machine continues to unspool its cryptic imagery on Artpace's front windows, presents two works hand-drawn in the painstakingly layered style that led to the beginning stages of her carpal tunnel syndrome. Cottrell's work as a part-time surgical assistant in a veterinary office inspired the two drawings here, which represent two technologies of internal imaging — a myelogram of a spine and an MRI.

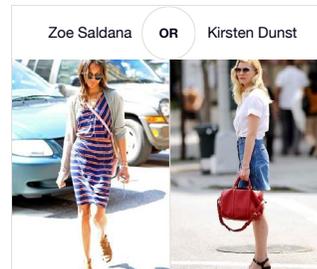

Known for her complex ink meditations, these two pieces are more representational, perhaps harkening back to earlier work, yet also can be read as abstract. As Cottrell points out, "I think that I've absorbed the aesthetics of medical imaging in my current drawings. Not to mention, conceptually, it is imagery unseen to the human eye."

Stacy Berfein deals with the human handprint on the environment in her pencil drawings of lush greenery on photographs of a dry riverbed, while Alex Rubio, the respected local muralist and

Your Vote

Which celeb pulled off the red, white and blue combo best?

YOU MIGHT ALSO LIKE

10 Award Winners Who Have Fallen Off the Big Screen
(Wall Street Cheat Sheet)

8 Celebrities That Nobody Wants To Work With (Your Daily Scoop)

13 Secrets Personal Organizers Would Never Tell You for Free
(Reader's Digest)

IKEA's New Collection Is Pretty Amazing
(PureWow)

Celebrity Buzz

Theron, Penn dazzle Dior as fashion gets

Prayer vigil held for comedian injured with

Not-so-basic drawings about moving the line - San Antonio Express-News

7/8/14 10:01 AM

painter, returned to his drawing roots during a recent residency in Vermont. His two striking graphite on paper images here are also a return to what Rubio calls "the cultural iconography and spirituality of my Latino-Chicano-Mexican-American identity." "Mano de Dios (Hand of God)" is an exceptionally powerful, inspirational work.

Lubbock artist Terry Morrow's surreal visions verge on steampunk in works such as "Professor Lockheed's Aquarium," while Austin artist Ian Ingram creates astoundingly accurate photorealistic self-portraits, one of which, decorated with actual butterflies, was inspired by the birth of his daughter. Nathan Heuer of Victoria is a talented draftsman whose architectural drawings capture what he calls "contemporary ruins" in splendid isolation.

Finally, Houston artist Gael Stack, truly a Texas treasure, who had a monograph of her work published last year by University of Texas Press, presents three of her multilayered narratives from the 2010 "Forty-one Songs" series. With elements of text, pictographs, symbols, Twombly-like doodles, simple line portraits and what may or may not be coffee spills, these works are like pages from a desk blotter detailing our lives.

sbennett@express-news.net

For information, visit www.swschool.org

Contribute to this story: Send us a tip | Suggest a Correction

E-mail Print Recommend 0 Tweet 10 G+1 0 0

About the Author

STEVE BENNETT Book editor/Arts and architecture writer

Email Me Facebook Twitter Google+ RSS

You Might Also Like

Inside the Shark Tank: This mom from Texas out-sharked the investors Bigcommerce

12 Popular Shows That Will Not Return to TV in 2015 Wall St. Cheat Street

The perfect sneaker that looks good too. Found. Joyus

13 Secrets Personal Organizers Would Never Tell You for Free Reader's Digest

From Around the Web

Two Adults, Two Kids, One Small Brooklyn Apartment—IKEA Makeover... (YouTube)

how to make Cheerios sheep snacks (CherylStyle)

8 Celebrities That Nobody Wants To Work With (Your Daily Scoop)

We Recommend

Pilot in deadly Texas crash not instrument rated

American Apparel celebrates 4th of July with dead astronauts

Duncan great, but kids, girlfriend nearly steal show

political

Theron, Penn dazzle Dior as fashion gets political

Morgan

Rain washes out much of practice at Daytona

mySpy Slideshows

mySpy: Tarzan the musical

mySpy: Mission Drive-In concert

mySpy: Olmos Park 4th of July

mySpy: Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey

Most Popular

Read

Photos show Johnny Manziel kissing Playboy model, rolling $20 bill in Las Vegas

Spurs still have options on free agent market via MLE

Kate's Frosting closing Broadway store

Spurs announce Cotton signing

Man pummeled to death at train station

Witness: Body stuffed into trunk was still moving

Splitter in World Cup spirit with soccer-style trick shot